

Short bio-statement

Emma Mitrotta is a PhD candidate at the School of International Studies, University of Trento. She has an MA in European and International Studies and a BA in Law. She has been an exchange student at the University of Cordova, and the University of Queensland.

Emma has worked as a researcher in environmental law at the European Academy of Bolzano (EURAC) and for the Economist Intelligence Unit (EIU). She has also worked as a legal consultant at the IUCN Environmental Law Centre in Bonn, and as a project assistant in Italy and Belgium.

Her research focuses on mechanisms of sub-national cooperation for the protection and management of transboundary natural resources. Her research interests include international environmental law, biodiversity conservation and ecosystem management, environmental damage during conflict and post-conflict reconstruction.

Emma is an Italian native speaker. She is proficient in English and Spanish, and has a good knowledge of French.